THE MIND OF MAN
No eye could be too sound
To observe a world so vast;
No patience too profound
To sort what's here amassed.—Matthew Arnold.

Between the no-creature preparation at the one limit, and our conscious willing selves at the other, there is a continuous gradation without a break; we cannot fix any linear barrier in the brain or in the general nervous system, and say "beyond this is volition and intelligence, but up to this there is none."—Michael Foster.
THE MIND OF MAN

A TEXT-BOOK OF PSYCHOLOGY

BY

GUSTAV SPILLER

London
SWAN, SONNEFSCHEIN & Co., Lim.
PATERNOSTER SQUARE
1902