A Note

As a student of Labour Economics, I have been feeling the need for an Indian study of the changing Level of Living. On my request, Sarvashri B. P. Guha and J. N. Sharma (who have worked on this subject in the Labour Bureau, Simla for some time) agreed to contribute two articles for the "Indian Journal of Labour Economics". The publication of these articles aroused keen interest. I, therefore, suggested to the authors that based on the articles, a monograph could be brought out. Now it is being published by the enterprising publishers Indian Publications, Calcutta. The manuscript was prepared under the auspices of the Indian Society of Labour Economics.

The authors have done a commendable work. I hope that they would try to inform us with further developments in this field through the revision and enlargement of the present work at appropriate time.
